

What is a CSA?

Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) has become a popular way for consumers to buy local, seasonal food directly from a farmer.

Here are the basics:

Farmer offers a certain number of "shares" to the public. Typically, the share consists of a box of vegetables, but other farm products may be included. Participants purchase a share and in return receive a quantity of seasonal produce each week throughout the farming season.

This arrangement creates several rewards for both the farmer and the consumer.

Advantages for the farmer

Allows time to spend marketing the food earlier in the year, before the long days in the field begin

Receive payment early in the season, which helps with the farm's cash flow

Have an opportunity to get to know the people who eat the food they grow

Advantages for consumer

Provides local and ultra-fresh food with all the flavor and nutritional benefits of just-picked vegetables

Try new vegetables and new ways of cooking

Visit and familiarize themselves with the farm on weekly pick-ups.

Find that kids typically favor food from "their" farm even veggies they've never been known to eat

Develop a relationship with the farmers who grow the food and learn more about how food is grown

HEMLOCK HILL FARM 2018 CSA

Healthy local food grown for your table

Get Started Right Away

In your share, you will receive a variety of fresh picked vegetables, eggs and pasture raised meats each week.

We will offer shares from June 7th to September 27th (17 weeks).

Each share will be enough for a family of four, (two adults and two children), about ten pounds.

Depending on the time of the season and success of individual crop plantings, the CSA share size is likely to fluctuate. In general, shares are lighter early in the season because most of the crops are still growing and sizing up. By midsummer and fall, the shares are abundant and diverse with a wide spectrum of tasty produce.

The shorter the chain between raw food and fork, the fresher it is and the more transparent the system is.
